

Hi everyone!

My name is Chen Jinyong. I came from Guangdong province, which is located in China. Currently I am getting a master's degree at the faculty of economics and law (major – jurisprudence) at Mogilev A. Kuleshov University. My choice fell on Belarus and this university because of combination of high-quality education, a friendly atmosphere and opportunities for personal and professional growth.

When choosing a country to study in I considered several options, but Belarus especially attracted me with its rich historical heritage, development of law and legislative framework, as well as accessibility and quality of education. Mogilev State A. Kuleshov University seemed to me the best option, as we receive knowledge from qualified specialists who not only provide theoretical knowledge, but also actively support students in their scientific work. This university provides excellent opportunities for my study and creativity, which creates a sense of real student life.

Jurisprudence is an area that I have always been interested in. I am inspired by the idea of helping people, protecting their rights and promoting a just society. Academic program includes important disciplines such as civil law, international and constitutional law, as well as specialized courses related to human rights and comparative law. Mogilev State A. Kuleshov University pays an important attention to practical aspect: we participate in training courts, simulation trials and legal conferences, which helps to better understand and apply knowledge in real life.

In addition to studying I actively take part in different research projects and student organizations. This experience greatly enriches my inner world and allows me to get to know colleagues from different countries.

As for my future plans I am determined to pursue a career in international law. I am currently considering the possibility of continuing my master's degree in order to deepen my knowledge in the field of international relations and law.

My studies at Mogilev State A. Kuleshov University became not only a step towards my professional dream, but also a unique life experience. I met amazing people, learnt more about the culture and traditions of Belarus and also learnt to be independent and responsible.

A piece of advice that I can give to future international students is not to be afraid to step out of your comfort zone, be active and open to new knowledge and acquaintances. The university and teachers are always ready to help, and student life is a wonderful stage which gives strength and inspiration for the further path.

I am grateful to everyone who provides quality education and supports international students.

I am sure that the knowledge and experience gained here will help me build a successful career and contribute to strengthening friendly ties between our countries.
